Create timelines from yearly, monthly and daily timeframes in just two easy steps (download and run)! L-Type Calcium Channels in the Dorsolateral Periaqueductal Gray Matter Mediate Somatodendritic Ca<sup>2+</sup> Transients Induced by Intraventricular Injection of N-Methyl-D-Aspartate in the Medial Preoptic Area. The dorsal periaqueductal gray matter (dPAG) modulates the behavioral and autonomic responses that occur during opioid withdrawal. Exposure to opioid withdrawal activates L-type voltage-gated Ca<sup>2+</sup> channels (VGCCs) in ventral regions of the dPAG, suggesting a role for these channels in behavioral and autonomic responses associated with opioid withdrawal. We hypothesized that L-type VGCCs may also be involved in somatodendritic Ca<sup>2+</sup> transients in dPAG neurons during opioid withdrawal. In situ hybridization confirmed the expression of L-type VGCC subunits (alpha1C, alpha1D, beta1, beta2 and alpha2delta1) in the dPAG. To examine the expression of these subunits in opioid withdrawal, rats were treated with naltrexone, and the dPAG was examined 1 hr later using Ca<sup>2+</sup> imaging. N-Methyl-D-aspartate (NMDA) microinjections in the medial preoptic area (mPOA) induced somatodendritic Ca<sup>2+</sup> transients in dPAG neurons. N-Methyl-D-aspartate microinjections in the mPOA induced Ca<sup>2+</sup> transients not only in dPAG neurons that were immunopositive for Ca<sup>2+</sup> channels (43%), but also in 46% of dPAG neurons that were immunonegative for Ca<sup>2+</sup> channels. These NMDA-induced Ca<sup>2+</sup> transients were inhibited in neurons expressing Ca<sup>2+</sup> channels. The L-type VGCC antagonist, nifedipine, attenuated the Ca<sup>2+</sup> transients induced by intramedial mPOA NMDA microinjections. These findings indicate that opioid withdrawal activates L-type VGCCs in the dPAG.
