PromiScan Cracked Version is a network sniffing application, developed with C/C++ and Qt for Windows. Its main purpose is to detect vulnerable nodes, which means that all incoming packets on the network will be analyzed and the information will be sent back to your own computer. The application's interface is very user-friendly and designed to enable you to scan a specific IP range in order to find out the devices that are connected to the Internet. PromiScan can also detect promiscuous interfaces that are often used in spying applications, meaning that it can identify users with malicious intentions. You can also have a quick look at the list of all connected devices, which may help you spot the suspicious ones. When the scan finishes, you will be able to see the list of all workstations along with the corresponding IP addresses, MAC addresses, the number of all packets received, the number of all packets that were sent and other relevant information. The ViewModels have basically the same structure but contain different objects. I am doing something like this: var vm = new ViewModel(employee); var vm2 = new ViewModel(person); var vm3 = new ViewModel(vehicle); var vm = new TestController(vm); var vm2 = new TestController(vm2); var vm3 = new TestController(vm3); The issue is that when I bind the views to vm and vm2 they work fine, but when I try to bind them to vm3 it doesn't work. Is there any way to connect two different viewmodels to the same controller? Or do I have to create a wrapper class for the viewmodel that both contain the common fields? Edit: The reason I need the TestController to be generic is that the class will be reused for different ViewModels. In this case Vehicle, Person and Employee would all be just different ViewModels of the same object. I have tried this: var vm = new TestController(vm); var vm2 = new TestController(vm2); var vm3 = new TestController(vm3); The problem is that now it will throw an exception when trying to bind to the controls since the BindingContext is null when trying to bind to the generic type. Is there any way to prevent this from happening? A: Since you
